

We believe that women's education, health and spirituality need special attention. We continue this mission in our schools, colleges, health-care institutions and spirituality centers. We advocate for equal pay, for services for domestic violence victims, and for the rights of girls and women in especially repressive societies.

Mercy embraces a particular concern for women by:

- empowering women experiencing poverty, domestic violence and other social ills
- prioritizing the education of girls and women
- speaking out against human trafficking and the particular risks for women and girls
- advocating for strong, inclusive laws for domestic violence victims
- using our power as investors to call for more women on corporate boards
- examining gender impacts of violence, climate change, immigration and many other issues we address
